APL Apollo-Tata Steel bet spooks the bulls

Derivatives traders turn sceptical as deal economics fail to add up

KAIRAVI LUKKA
Mumbai, 25 November

APL Apollo Tubes shares plunged over 30 per cent in the past two trading sessions, hitting a fresh 52-week low of ₹1,342.20 on Wednesday before recovering to close at ₹1,476. Tata Steel, meanwhile, has declined 10.5 per cent since Friday, falling 2.3 per cent to ₹159.3 on Wednesday. Call writers are betting that the stock will not cross ₹170.

Under the proposed transaction, APL Apollo will acquire Tata Steel's tubes and metal and coated steel businesses for ₹28,000 crore. Separately, Tata Steel will acquire a 26.38 per cent stake in APL Apollo from the promoter group at ₹2,100 per share, followed by an open offer for an additional 26 per cent at ₹2,301.4 per share.

Concerns over the financial burden on APL Apollo, coupled with uncertainty over shareholder approval and the potential impact on valuations, have weighed on sentiment towards both stocks. This has wiped out a combined ₹45,608 crore in market capitalisation from the two companies since November 19.

"Can a promoter commit his company to a significant transaction while simultaneously selling all his shares at the same time? This way promoter can get a better price for himself in return for committing his company to an unfavourable transaction," Sameer Arora said on X, the social media platform on November 23 after the deal was not appreciated by the street.

The derivatives market gave the first signals of a shift in sentiment.

Traders piled into APL Apollo Tubes call options three days before the first media report on the deal emerged. A similar build-up was not seen in Tata Steel options.

Initially, the market was upbeat about the stock. However, just before the announcement, sentiment in the derivatives market shifted from bullish to bearish. Call volumes in APL Apollo surged 25-fold on November 16, with 112,511 contracts traded, compared with 4,600 contracts in early November. Subsequently, the bearish bets turned more aggressive.

The November 2,300 call alone saw 35,472 contracts traded, while open interest in the option nearly doubled. The stock hit a 52-week high of ₹2,312.30 during the session, pushing the premium on that call from ₹27.75 to ₹58.5 before it closed at ₹19.7. In the cash market, 1.85 million shares changed hands, 6x the volume recorded at the start of the month. The company made no exchange filings that day.

The bets reversed the following day. On November 17, the stock fell 2.7 per cent, while positions shifted towards put options. Sentiment turned decisively bearish, with puts betting on a fall of 8-10 per cent seeing the most traction. The first media report on the proposed transaction appeared on November 19.

Investors have since raised concerns over the acquisition price and its financial implications for APL Apollo. Sham Chandak, head of institutional equities at Elios Financial Services, said minority investors had got a raw deal in the transaction.

He said the stock was likely to remain volatile in the near term because of uncertainty surrounding the deal. "Even if the deal goes through, the debt burden will mean a sharp markdown in APL Apollo's valuation multiples," Chandak added.

Brokerages have also turned more cautious. Axis Direct has retained its "buy" rating but cut its target price to ₹1,835 from ₹2,500, saying the upfront valuation appears expensive relative to asset replacement costs and leaves little margin of safety if synergies or integration are delayed. Nuvama has downgraded the stock to "hold", with a fair value of ₹1,459 and a near-term target price of ₹1,739, factoring in the open offer.

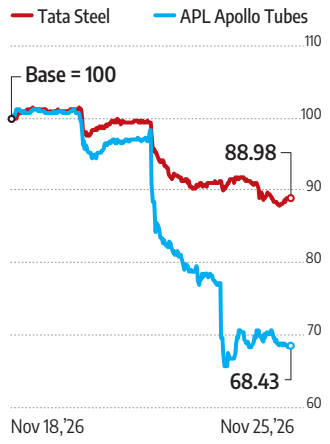

The projections

Figures in ₹ crore	Tata Steel	APL Apollo
Revenue
FY27E	2,64,801	27,717
Y-o-Y change (%)	15.0	23.8
Net profit
FY27E	17,274	1,478
Y-o-Y change (%)	60.0	22.8

Look past grey market when applying for IPO

HIMALI PATEL

The Securities and Exchange Board of India (Sebi) has asked intermediaries and other market participants to stop publishing or circulating grey market premiums (GMPs) for upcoming initial public offerings (IPOs). In its November 23, 2026 advisory, Sebi said the quotes are unofficial and unverified and derived from unregulated trades.

"Sebi's concern is that GMP creates an illusion of price discovery where none actually exists. Investors may mistake speculative market sentiment for a credible indication of the listing price," says Pranav Haldea, managing director, PRIME Database Group. Investors should understand the risks of grey market deals and relying on GMPs to invest in IPOs for listing gains.

How grey market works

Before exchange trading begins, participants informally agree to buy or sell IPO shares or application or allotment rights. No shares change hands then. "If the applicant gets shares, the parties typically settle the difference between the agreed price and the listing price in cash. Without an allotment, the deal usually falls through," says Eshaan Lazarus, founder and chief executive officer (CEO), 021 Trade.

The GMP is what buyers pay per share above the issue price. Dealers quote it based on bids and asking prices. "It can rise when demand strengthens and sellers are scarce, or fall and even turn negative if there is reduced interest," says Lazarus.

In a Kostak deal, often struck in oversubscribed IPOs, the buyer seeks shares through someone else's application. The buyer pays a fee even if the applicant is not allotted shares. "The risk here is that listing gains may not cover the Kostak fee," says Lazarus. In a subject-to-sauda deal, the buyer pays only if the applicant gets shares.

Why grey market deals fail

Even if a stock lists above its issue price, buyers can still lose money if the gain falls short of the premium paid. There is also the possibility of either party not honouring the deal. Participants lack exchange settlement guarantees, investor protection and access to grievance redressal through Sebi or the exchanges.

GMP can mislead

A premium may lead investors to expect a listing gain of a similar size. But investors must remember that the grey market lacks a transparent order book and verifiable volumes. "A handful of dealers and participants can influence the quoted premium, which can then be amplified through websites, social media and messaging platforms," says Haldea. Retail investors cannot tell whether the GMP figure is backed by a substantial amount of trading.

"Smaller IPOs are more vulnerable because even relatively small trades can influence sentiment," says Harsh Vira, founder and CEO, FinPro Wealth. GMPs have not been a sure-shot predictor of listing gains in the past. Skyways Air Services, for instance, had a GMP of 23 per cent, yet listed 10 per cent below its ₹138 issue price. "Actual market sentiment can differ from grey market expectations," says Vira. Haldea adds that GMP can change dramatically between the close of an IPO and its listing, depending on broader market conditions, institutional demand and changes in investor sentiment.

Betting on a listing pop: What can go wrong

- If heavily oversubscribed, many applicants may get no shares
- Application amount gets blocked until allotment
- Blocked funds may mean missed opportunity elsewhere
- Shares can list below issue price due to change in market sentiment
- Transaction costs and short-term capital gains erode listing gains

Assessing IPO demand

As the offer nears its close, investors often check demand across investor categories: Qualified institutional buyers (QIBs), non-institutional investors (NIIs) and retail investors. Final-day subscriptions for QIBs, NIIs and retail investors show demand relative to reserved shares. "They do not mean the share price will rise by the same multiple," says Nilesh Hanumandas Sarda, a Sebi-registered research analyst.

Focus on fundamentals

Read the prospectus to understand what the company sells, how it earns money and what could drive growth. Compare debt, revenue and profit growth with those of listed peers. Also assess valuation. "Do not assume a good business is automatically a good investment," says Sarda.

Weight and then score each of these fundamentals-based parameters. Apply if the issue scores well. Invest with a long horizon, given the uncertainty of listing gains.

SC bars coercive loan recovery: What should homebuyers do

The Supreme Court has asked courts to establish whether homebuyers defaulted on their loans before permitting coercive recovery in stalled housing projects. The order came in a case involving buyers of a project in Sohna, Gurugram, where State Bank of India had initiated recovery proceedings despite the project remaining incomplete.

The court asked the commercial court to examine whether loan disbursals complied with construction milestones under the tripartite agreement between buyers, the developer and the bank.

The buyers alleged that funds were released without corresponding construction progress. The developer was admitted into insolvency proceedings in August 2025.

The court said recovery action should not proceed without first determining whether buyers had defaulted and whether the bank had complied with the agreement. However, the ruling does not automatically cancel loan liabilities.

The safeguards

Check the agreement: Verify whether loan disbursals were linked to construction milestones

Collect documents: Keep loan sanction letters, disbursement records and construction progress certificates

Respond to notices: Raise objections before the relevant court or tribunal instead of ignoring recovery notices

File insolvency claims: If the developer enters insolvency, submit claims to the resolution professional within the deadline.
