IMMIGRATION LEADS TO LOWER PAY FOR COLLEGE-EDUCATED WORKERS

H-1B visa delays, Trump rules force workers to leave US

FRANCESCA MAGLIONE & ALICIA A. CALDWELL
November 20

YASH SHARMA DECIDED last month that he's had enough of the US. The 36-year-old Google software engineer from India says halfway through Donald Trump's second term, the constant rule changes around visas for highly skilled immigrants, the unknowns they create and the slim odds of him becoming a citizen have all become too much.

Sharma, who has had an H-1B visa for six years, says it's become hard to focus at work. And while he loves his life in San Francisco and working at the epicenter of tech and AI, he feels like he's run out of options to gain permanent residency and build a life here.

The US feels like a "golden prison," Sharma said. He plans to move to the UK next month, even though he doesn't have a job there, because he was offered a visa with a clear path to staying in the country for the long term.

This month's midterm elections delivered a rebuke of Trump's immigration crackdown, helping Democrats win control of Congress and prompting the president to acknowledge that his administration may have been "too tough" in deporting people who had jobs.

But less acknowledged has been the administration's reshaping of visa rules that for years have channeled graduates and highly skilled employees into the workforce. The newly empowered opposition won't have an easy time reversing Trump's rule changes, which have effectively dismantled an immigration system that helped make America a destination for the world's best engineers and researchers. Just this week, the Labor Department proposed tighter rules for companies seeking to sponsor foreign workers for permanent residency.

Some of the biggest US companies are giving up on the idea anything will change soon. International Business Machines (IBM) is ending US visa sponsorships for most jobs in its largest division, leaving affected employees to transfer outside the US or plan on leaving the company by year-end. Payments company Flywire is weighing whether to put more hiring and development work overseas, while Microsoft, Adobe and a handful of IT outsourcing firms have been barred from a key green-card sponsorship programme as federal officials probe their practices.

The Trump administration says workers and employers have abused the immigration system for years, moving it away from its origins as a way to get highly specialised talent into the country on a temporary basis into a sprawling behemoth that's resulted in lower pay for Americans.

Research into the question of how immigrants affect wages has shown mixed results. But a recently released study by a Harvard University economist who served on Trump's Council of Economic Advisers found skilled immigration leads to lower pay for college-educated US workers, particularly in scientific fields.

Trump's appointment this month of Stephen Miller as chief of staff gives the long-time advocate of reducing all forms of immigration greater authority, while investigations into employers' green-card sponsorships, announced last month by Vice President JD Vance, have added to the pressure.

"It's a quiet dismantling of employment-based immigration," said Angelo Paparelli, an immigration attorney and partner at Vialto Law.

There's a growing sense that the friction and unpredictability are the new normal for the US immigration system. That's changing assumptions about the future of the US economy and forcing businesses to plan for a world in which they may not be able to bring top talent to work in their US headquarters.

"Economies of scale are tricky things. It's a bit like a reputation: it can take years to build and no time to utterly destroy it," said Scott Corley, executive director of Compete America, a coalition of major US technology and high-skilled professional employers.

Sharma says he's felt discouraged about the chances he'd ever be able to convert his temporary visa into permanent residency given a huge backlog for Indian nationals. He hasn't left the country in a year and a half, concerned he might not be able to get back in. That's meant missing out on family visits, work conferences and trips with friends.

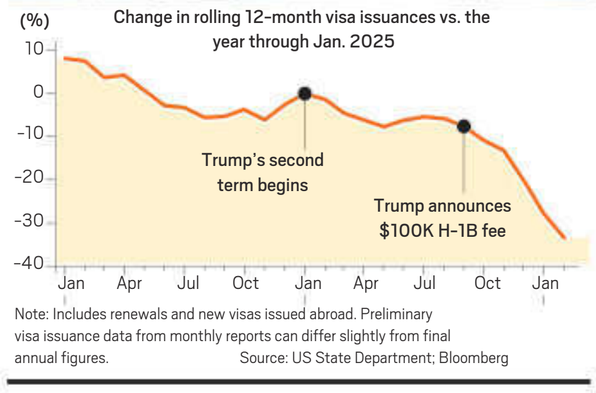

He sought another path to permanent residency and more stability by applying for an "extraordinary ability" visa, given to people with standout talent in their field, but was rejected after months of waiting.

The uncertainly led Sharma to consider a life outside the US. He applied for a Global Talent visa from the UK and was approved, allowing him to move to the UK without a job and begin looking for work. He says the US election results haven't dissuaded him from the plan.

"I've seen various administrations, and to me it's clear that there will be no actual change to the law," he said. And even if things returned to how they were before, the difficulty of getting permanent residency would still weigh on him. "That normal still sucks," he said. —BLOOMBERG

PM: Cultural cooperation will strengthen relations

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, November 20

PRIME MINISTER NARENDRA Modi on Friday said cultural and civilisational cooperation will strengthen relations among various countries and twenty-first-century technology has created new possibilities for cultural connectivity.

Inaugurating the first SCO Civilisational Dialogue Forum in New Delhi, Modi also said that thousands of years of priceless heritage is preserved in the museums, libraries and archives of India, and with the help of technology, this heritage can be passed on to the new generation.

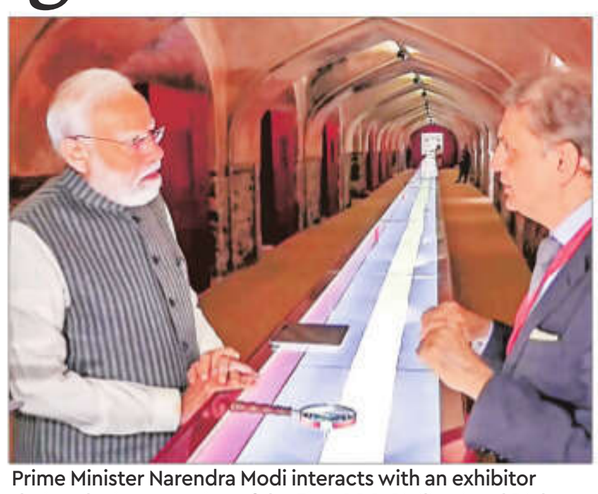

"In recent years, the SCO has significantly increased cooperation in security, economy and connectivity. In such a scenario, cultural and civilisational cooperation will further strengthen relations among various countries," he said. "I am confident that new ideas will emerge from this forum, new opportunities for cultural cooperation will be created and our shared civilisational experiences will play a crucial role in uniting the world."

The prime minister said empires have certainly changed the maps of the world, but civilisational dialogues have changed the world's ideas and enriched them.

"Therefore, the SCO Civilisational Summit is not merely a ceremonial platform but it can become a platform to give direction to the world," he said.

Modi said the 21st-century technology has created new possibilities for cultural connectivity in the world.

"Across the very routes where our ancestors once had to travel for months, people from those same countries can now connect with one another in just a few seconds. Digital platforms have made knowledge sharing, cultural exchange and international collaboration easier than ever before."

IMMIGRATION LEADS TO LOWER PAY FOR COLLEGE-EDUCATED WORKERS

H-1B visa delays, Trump rules force workers to leave US

FRANCESCA MAGLIONE & ALICIA A CALDWELL
November 20

YASH SHARMA DECIDED last month that he's had enough of the US. The 36-year-old Google software engineer from India says halfway through Donald Trump's second term, the constant rule changes around visas for highly skilled immigrants, the unknowns they create and the slim odds of him becoming a citizen have all become too much.

Sharma, who has had an H-1B visa for six years, says it's become hard to focus at work. And while he loves his life in San Francisco and working at the epicenter of tech and AI, he feels like he's run out of options to gain permanent residency and build a life here.

The US feels like a "golden prison," Sharma said. He plans to move to the UK next month, even though he doesn't have a job there, because he was offered a visa with a clear path to staying in the country for the long term.

This month's midterm elections delivered a rebuke of Trump's immigration crackdown, helping Democrats win control of Congress and prompting the president to acknowledge that his administration may have been "too tough" in deporting people who had jobs.

But less acknowledged has been the administration's reshaping of visa rules that for years have channeled graduates and highly skilled employees into the workforce. The newly empowered opposition won't have an easy time reversing Trump's rule changes, which have effectively dismantled an immigration system that helped make America a destination for the world's best engineers and researchers. Just this week, the Labor Department proposed tighter rules for companies seeking to sponsor foreign workers for permanent residency.

Some of the biggest US companies are giving up on the idea anything will change soon. International Business Machines (IBM) is ending US visa sponsorships for most jobs in its largest division, leaving affected employees to transfer outside the US or plan on leaving the company by year-end. Payments company Flywire is weighing whether to put more hiring and development work overseas, while Microsoft, Adobe and a handful of IT outsourcing firms have been barred from a key green-card sponsorship programme as federal officials probe their practices.

The Trump administration says workers and employers have abused the immigration system for years, moving it away from its origins as a way to get highly specialised talent into the country on a temporary basis into a sprawling behemoth that's resulted in lower pay for Americans.

Research into the question of how immigrants affect wages has shown mixed results. But a recently released study by a Harvard University economist who served on Trump's Council of Economic Advisers found skilled immigration leads to lower pay for college-educated US workers, particularly in scientific fields.

Trump's appointment this month of Stephen Miller as chief of staff gives the longtime advocate of reducing all forms of immigration greater authority, while investigations into employers' green-card sponsorships, announced last month by Vice President JD Vance, have added to the pressure.

"It's a quiet dismantling of employment-based immigration," said Angelo Paparelli, an immigration attorney and partner at Vialto Law.

There's a growing sense that the friction and unpredictability are the new normal for the US immigration system. That's changing assumptions about the future of the US economy and forcing businesses to plan for a world in which they may not be able to bring top talent to work in their US headquarters.

"Economies of scale are tricky things. It's a bit like a reputation: it can take years to build and no time to utterly destroy it," said Scott Corley, executive director of Compete America, a coalition of major US technology and high-skilled professional employers.

Sharma says he's felt discouraged about the chances he'd ever be able to convert his temporary visa into permanent residency given a huge backlog for Indian nationals. He hasn't left the country in a year and a half, concerned he might not be able to get back in. That's meant missing out on family visits, work conferences and trips with friends.

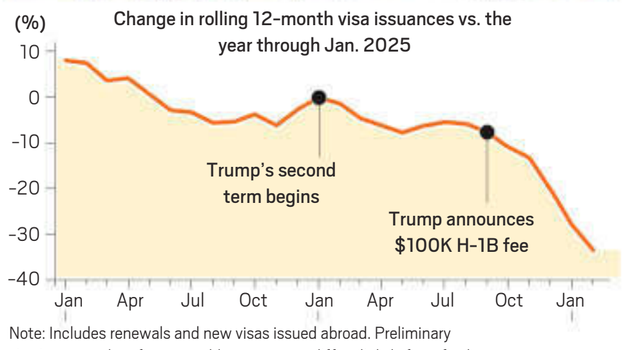

He sought another path to permanent residency and more stability by applying for an "extraordinary ability" visa, given to people with standout talent in their field, but was rejected after months of waiting.

The uncertainly led Sharma to consider a life outside the US. He applied for a Global Talent visa from the UK and was approved, allowing him to move to the UK without a job and begin looking for work. He says the US election results haven't dissuaded him from the plan.

"I've seen various administrations, and to me it's clear that there will be no actual change to the law," he said. And even if things returned to how they were before, the difficulty of getting permanent residency would still weigh on him. "That normal still sucks," he said. —BLOOMBERG

Amid talks of unrest, India engaging in dialogue: PM

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, November 20

PRIME MINISTER NARENDRA Modi on Friday said cultural connections are the strongest guarantee of global peace, and cultural and civilisational cooperation among member countries of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) can further strengthen these ties.

Inaugurating the first SCO Civilisational Dialogue Forum here, Modi also said that empires have certainly changed the map of the world but civilisational dialogues have changed the way the world thinks, and that is why the SCO civilisational summit is not merely a ceremonial platform but can become a forum for giving the world direction.

"At a time when discussions about war and unrest dominate the world, we in India are engaging in initiatives on civilisational dialogue and connectivity. This is also important because cultural connections are the strongest guarantee of global peace. This makes this event all the more significant," he said at the forum attended by delegates from various SCO member countries, including Pakistan minister Musadik Malik.

The prime minister said there is much discussion in the world about international collaboration and people-to-people connections, and this is an approach that the ancestors nurtured for centuries.

He said around 5,000 years ago, there were trade relations between the Indus Valley Civilisation and Mesopotamia, while later, other trade routes expanded that network of connections.

"India, China, Central Asia and many regions of Eurasia were connected through these ancient trade networks. Scholars and Buddhist monks travelled these routes alongside traders. These journeys led to an exchange of ideas, languages and traditions," he said.

Cyclone Akvan weakens into depression after landfall in Odisha

CYCLONE AKVAN WEAKENED into a depression after making landfall near Gopalpur on the Odisha coast on Friday, bringing heavy rainfall but causing no major damage or loss of life, Disaster Management Minister Suresh Pujari said.

The state government has also ruled out any immediate flood threat despite heavy downpour, even as it shifted over 440,000 people to safer places. The East Coast Railway cancelled 45 trains and rescheduled 29 on Thursday, while the South Eastern Railway cancelled at least 28 express trains on Friday as a precautionary measure. Most of the affected trains were bound for or passing through Puri. Pujari said 1,452 babies were delivered during the cyclone after their mothers were shifted to safer locations.

The India Meteorological Department (IMD) said the system moved northwards at a speed of 12 kmph during the six hours preceding 5.30 pm and lay centred over south Odisha. —PTI
